

The EU does not want you you to go on reading the Salisbury Review

A new Data Protection Act invented by the EU, means that from the 25th of May we can no longer contact you in order for you to buy the magazine, renew your subscription or receive passwords unless you give us your express permission.

If we do not have your explicit permission to contact you by post, telephone or email you will not receive any communication from us about anything ..

Including not receiving your copy of the Salisbury Review or notification of membership renewal

To give us your permission press the yes button.

YES

We will not use your name, address, email or telephone number for any other purpose than contacting you about your subscription. You can withdraw your permission at any time or ask for any details we hold about you.

Details of the act, predicted by experts to put a huge number of small non profit organisations such as the Salisbury Review out of business, are available on our web site Data Protection Act

The Editor
The Salisbury Review